Letters to the editor

Dear editor,

I am writing today to ask for advice about a fear that I have. I can't stand going to the dentist, because I went two years ago and I had a very bad experience. I had very bad toothache and the pain was killing me, so I went to the dentist. But I left feeling worse than when I went in. The dentist told me that I might have some pain, but she said that it was normal. So, I wasn't worried about it.

For about two weeks after that, I had a fever and a sore throat. I also had a headache for most of the time, and my mouth hurt all over. I don't know if I was allergic to the penicillin, but the experience was so awful that I didn't want to ever go back again.

This bad experience means that now I have a fear of dentists. I know I have to face my fear, but I can't stand thinking about the pain that I might have if I go again. I work as an accountant for a company and every two years we have to go to the dentist for an examination. I have to go to see the dentist next Friday. I know it probably won't be as awful as I think, but this is a very stressful situation for me.
