BE A GOOD FOLLOWER

Every company has leaders. The leaders are responsible for making decisions and managing teams. The people on the teams are followers. They have to work together or alone to do jobs that the leaders tell them to do. It is common to hear people talk about how to become a good leader, but followers are just as important. In fact, before you can become a good leader, you have to learn to be a good follower. How can you do this?

First, understand the goals of your organization. If you can understand what your boss or company is trying to do, then you will see in what way your work is important to the organization as a whole. This will keep you more interested in your work and more satisfied when you finish each job. As you achieve your goals, the company you work for is achieving theirs as well.

Second, listen carefully to instructions so that you understand what you have to do. You must be honest. If something is not clear to you, it is better for your boss to repeat the instructions than for you to do the job the wrong way.

Good followers also learn to get along with others at work even if they have different opinions. By being cheerful and helpful, you will build good relationships with the other members of your company. If you need help in the future, they may help you in return. Finally, good followers need to be brave. If the leaders make any mistakes, the followers need to tell them.

If you can develop these skills, you will not only be a good follower. You will also be learning how to become a good leader in the future.

Would you like to work this summer? Are you interested in helping your local area?

We are looking for people to join our team of volunteers.

By volunteering, you can get useful life experience and skills. You will gain knowledge of the real world through real practical work. At the same time, you can explore your career and college interests. It's a good feeling helping others and you will make a lot of good friends.

When you list your volunteer work on your college applications, you show colleges your interests and personality. When you leave college, volunteer work will make your résumé stand out and make employers respect you more.

For example, when he was in college, Matthew spent his summer volunteering at a local hospital. He chose an area with a lot of Spanish speakers so he could practice his language skills while observing doctors. He asked the doctors questions about medicine at the end of each day and learned a lot. Now, he has left the US, and he works at a hospital in Mexico.

Volunteers don't only learn from the people they help but also from the other volunteers they work with. It doesn't matter who you work with. Their experience is different from yours.

You don't have to do big things since even small things can make a big difference to others. Amanda, now a hotel receptionist, still remembers spending one day with a retired man who was 80 years old. "He told me funny stories and we laughed a lot. When I said goodbye, he said 'Thank you for the visit. I'm really grateful.' I was thrilled to see him so happy."

So, what are you waiting for?

For a list of volunteer opportunities in your area, click here.
