Childhood memories

My parents traveled a lot when I was young, so my early memories are a jumble of different things from different places. I remember living in Singapore for a few years, from when I was about 7 to 11, and I think those were my happiest years. Moving so often was unsettling and I remember begging my parents not to move again. I don't think they ever stopped to think about how difficult it was for me. Eventually we went to Chicago and stayed. My parents are still there, and I don't think they'll move away again. While in Chicago, I joined a soccer club and fell in love with the game. Any spare moment I had I would play, and I still do now. If I had to choose between my studies and soccer... I think soccer would win!

~Ian

When I was five years old we moved to Seattle from Korea because my dad had a job in an aeronautical company. I have two older brothers, and I don't think they were happy about having to move. But I was young, and I can't really remember living in Korea. We go back on vacation and see our family, and that helps me understand where I come from. I went to a local school in Seattle, and I remember making friends right away. I always worked hard in school and got good grades, so my parents let me do whatever I wanted on the weekend.

~Choi

My first memories are of reading books. Looking back, I think I was quite lonely as a child. Both my parents are writers, and I can remember being alone for hours when they were both working. I can't remember talking to them much about writing, and they certainly never asked me much about school. In fact, they let me do whatever I wanted. I suppose for some kids this sounds ideal, but I think I just wanted them to spend time with me.

~Jenny
