

Unit Quiz 6B

Interviewer: Hi, good morning. Please have a seat.

Bill: Thanks. Good morning.

Interviewer: Now, Bill, you've probably looked at our website and are familiar with the different volunteer projects which we have available at the moment.

Bill: Yes, I have, and I've spoken to a friend who has experience working for you. You have an amazing group of projects, and the truth is that I was very tempted to apply for all of them! However, I decided that I should only be involved in projects where my experience is the most helpful.

Interviewer: Remember that you are given training before you start in any of the volunteer positions and before you go to the country. So you don't need to worry too much about your previous experience or qualifications.

Bill: OK. Well, the one I think looks most rewarding is the elephant park in Thailand.

Interviewer: That is a lovely project. Basically, the elephants must be taken care of during the day, and they can't be left alone when they are bathing in the local pond. You are given instructions by experts on how to feed the animals and how to connect with them. There are about 40 elephants in this center, so you can imagine that looking after the animals can't be done by the small staff we have in Thailand. That's why we rely on help from volunteers like yourself.

Bill: Sounds great.

Interviewer: If you decide to apply for this position, you'll be asked to complete an application form that will be sent to the project manager in Thailand.

Bill: It sounds like just the sort of project that I had in mind, and I'd love to take part in it. I hope I can be given the chance to help out the people who work there and be involved with something so exciting.
