

EVOLVE LEVEL 6, FINAL TEST A

LISTENING 1

- Alexis Hi, Tyler! How was your weekend?
- Tyler Great! I went to Gulliver's Gate with my sister – it's an interactive museum of things in miniature. It's right in the heart of New York with exhibits from all around the world. It's a great way to see most of the major sights around the world without taking a plane. Some of the cities were set in the modern day, but others were scenes from ancient civilizations like the Mayans in Mexico or the Incas in Peru.
- Alexis So which cities did you see?
- Tyler A lot but not all of them. Apparently, each city was crafted by artists from those countries. New York got more attention than most, of course. My sister said she saw every single city, but I'm not sure I believe her. My favorites were London and Rome, but my sister couldn't decide between Paris and Delhi.
- Alexis Didn't you get bored?
- Tyler Not at all. We were given a key which unlocked interactive experiences within the models. And not all the models were still objects, there were moving elements too, like the waterfalls in Iguazú and the boats on the Panama Canal. And lots of moving trains, of course. Their website says they will eventually have 1,000 trains with 12,000 train cars! They even had a miniaturized airport with a plane taking off!
- Alexis Is it a good place for kids?
- Tyler Well, there were lots of kids there. Some were a little bit too excited because they were playing a game where they had to find things hidden in the models. Of course, they loved inserting their keys and seeing what would happen. I think there could've been more written information to make it more educational, but would kids stop to read it? Probably not!
- Alexis Sounds like it's worth a visit though.
- Tyler Definitely!
