My First Indian Wedding

I was beyond excited when my friend Rita invited me to her wedding ... in India! My initial reaction of joy to her marriage and images of me dancing Bollywood-style in a sari was tinged with doubts as to whether I could afford a flight there and how my poor, sensitive stomach would cope with three days of spicy food! As I had always wanted to visit India, and this was a once-in-a-lifetime invitation, I felt I couldn't refuse.

On the wedding day itself, I was full of questions. Could I take photos? Would I have to put on my sari myself? Would my gift be liked? Before I could think further, I noticed the henna tattoo on my hands (which had just taken two hours to apply the day before) had started to rub off! Fortunately, I got to meet Rita as she was preparing her clothes and make up, and she suggested I gently rub olive oil on my hands. This worked, although I had to be very careful each time I washed my hands! When the bride was ready, she was taken away, and the guests (who had been waiting for two hours) all pulled out their smartphones, so that answered one of my questions!

My favorite wedding ritual was Joota Chupai, which involved stealing the groom's shoes and hiding them from him and his family. Naturally, he didn't find them and had to pay to get them back! The wedding meal was a buffet, but before I could join the long line, Rita's sister, Gita pulled me onto the dance floor to dance. I couldn't compete with all the vigorous dance steps, but Gita taught me some moves, and fortunately I just about kept up! As for the food ... well, I ate mountains, and I don't think my stomach has forgiven me yet!

- 1 How did the writer react to the wedding invitation?
 - A unsure she would be able to find a flight
 - B anxious about her dancing ability
 - C sure it was a unique chance to realize a long-held ambition
- 2 On the day of the wedding, the writer ...

 - B received help putting on her sari from the bride.
 - C got a poor-quality henna tattoo.
- 3 What does the writer say about the bride, Rita?
 - A She upset the guests by keeping them waiting for hours.
 - B She gave the writer some useful advice.
 - C She answered one of the writer's questions.
- 4 How did the writer feel at the wedding?
 - A disappointed by the size of the line for the food
 - B relieved she could dance at the same speed as the other guests
 - C happy to earn some money by participating in a ritual
- 5 What does the writer imply about the food at the wedding?
 - A She ate more than she should have.
 - B There was a lot of food to choose from.
 - C She would have eaten more, but the line was too long.
